Purple Mash by 2Simple

In the first article in this series, I explained how to use Python to create a simple, text-based dice game. In the second part, you began building a game from scratch, starting with creating the game's environment. And in the third installment, you created a player sprite and made it spawn in your (rather empty) game world. As you've probably noticed, a game isn't much fun when you can't move ...
